

A New 'Transformers' Movie Is Coming, With Steven Spielberg's Help

From: IndieWire Mined: 2026-10-07 3 min read

Get ready for more giant robots! Paramount Pictures is working on an eighth "Transformers" movie, the film news site IndieWire reports.

The "Transformers" movies are based on Hasbro toys. The toys are robots that can change into cars, trucks and other machines. The movies have earned about $5.4 billion around the world.

Famous filmmaker Steven Spielberg has joined as an executive producer. He will help guide the movie's ideas, along with producer Lorenzo di Bonaventura. Spielberg signed on after reading the script.

Writer Jason Fuchs wants the new film to feel like the original movies. It will take place in modern times. The story is still a secret.

Michael Bay directed the first five movies. He is in early talks to direct again, but nothing is final. Shia LaBeouf, who starred in the first films, will not come back.

A planned movie mixing "Transformers" and "G.I. Joe" is not moving forward.

Word Treasure

executive producer -- A person who helps guide the big choices for a movie.

script -- The written words for a movie that tell actors what to say and do.

filmmaker -- A person who makes movies.

producer -- A person who helps plan and pay for making a movie.

directed -- Was in charge of filming a movie and telling the actors what to do.

Background you need

Transformers started as toy robots that can change into cars, trucks and other machines. The toys later became cartoons and big movies with giant robot heroes. Movie studios often make more movies in a series when lots of people love the first ones.
