Twin rock musicians get a surprise role in Olivia Rodrigo's new video

Olivia Rodrigo has a new music video for a remix of her song "Expectations" with Chappell Roan. It is full of surprise guest appearances, including musician David Byrne as a game-show host. Fans of New York's underground rock scene spotted another surprise: identical twin brothers Jake and Matt Derting, who make up the punk band Venus Twins.

In the video, the twins appear on Rodrigo's team in a game-show contest styled like Family Feud.

The brothers, who grew up near Fort Worth, Texas, before moving to New York, told Rolling Stone that a casting agent contacted them about a month ago. At first, they were not told who the artist was. "I think they were just looking for punks," Matt said. "We didn't even know who it was until literally the night before."

The next morning, they went to a big warehouse studio in Astoria, Queens. They spent about an hour in hair and makeup getting spiky punk hairstyles. They were amazed by the size of the shoot, with about 100 people working on the set. Their own band's projects are usually much smaller.

The twins met the stars briefly. "She was so sweet," Matt said about Rodrigo. "Really great energy." Roan was on the other team in the game show, so Jake joked that she was their rival. They also chatted with Byrne. "He was so cool," Matt said.

The crew asked them to act like "the mean family" during their scene, which took about two hours to film. "We were coming home feeling 10 feet tall," Jake said. "It was such an honor."

The brothers are now finishing a new Venus Twins album, which they say is "more poppy and more electronic."
