

Trump Makes a Deal to Get Diesel Fuel From Russia

From: BBC News Mined: 2026-10-09 3 min read

President Donald Trump says he has made a deal to bring Russian diesel fuel to the United States. Diesel is a fuel used by trucks, trains and farm machines.

Fuel prices in America have gone up a lot in recent months. The BBC says this is linked to a war involving Iran that began in February.

On Friday, Trump said Russian President Vladimir Putin agreed to send 300,000 tonnes of diesel right away, then 500,000 tonnes in November and another million tonnes later. The US is pausing some trade penalties, called sanctions, until April 7.

Not everyone thinks the plan will work. An expert named Tim Armitage said the first delivery is "relatively small" and will not change prices at the gas pump much.

Ukraine has been fighting against Russia's invasion. Ukraine's President Volodymyr Zelensky called the deal a gift to Putin and said it "will not work for peace." The United Kingdom said it will keep supporting Ukraine.

Word Treasure

diesel -- A fuel used by trucks, trains and farm machines.

sanctions -- Penalties that limit trade with a country to pressure it.

tonnes -- A unit of weight; one tonne is about 2,205 pounds.

invasion -- When an army goes into another country by force.

Background you need

Diesel and gasoline are made from oil, and their prices can rise when there are wars or shortages around the world.

Russia invaded Ukraine, so many countries put sanctions on Russia to limit the money it makes selling fuel.

Break it down

WHO: President Donald Trump, Russian President Vladimir Putin and Ukraine's President Volodymyr Zelensky

WHAT: A deal to bring Russian diesel to the United States in several deliveries

WHERE: The United States and Russia, with reaction from Ukraine and the United Kingdom

WHY: To try to lower high fuel prices in America

Why it matters

Fuel prices affect how much families pay for gas, food and other things they buy every day.
