

Trump Urges Calls to Senator Cotton Over Daylight Saving Time

From: PBS NewsHour Mined: 2026-10-03 3 min read

On Saturday, October 3, President Donald Trump urged Americans to contact Arkansas Senator Tom Cotton about a plan to keep daylight saving time all year. Cotton repeated his opposition to the plan.

Daylight saving time is the period from spring to fall when most parts of the United States set clocks one hour ahead of standard time. Most people change their clocks twice each year. Some states do not follow daylight saving time.

A bill called the Sunshine Protection Act passed the House of Representatives in July. It still faces opposition in the Senate, so the proposed change has not become law.

Supporters, including the White House, say the plan would place more daylight in the hours when people are active. Trump also says changing clocks around the house is troublesome.

Opponents say keeping that clock setting through winter would mean later sunrises by the clock. Cotton says he is concerned about children going to school in darkness. Other opponents also worry about children waiting for school buses and parents driving to work.

The proposal would let states choose not to take part if their lawmakers acted before it became law. The debate concerns which hours should line up with daylight, including time for evening activities and morning travel.

Word Treasure

Senator -- A member of the United States Senate.

standard time -- The time setting that daylight saving time moves one hour ahead of.

bill -- A proposed law.

opposition -- Disagreement with a plan.

lawmakers -- People who make and vote on laws.

proposal -- A plan offered for consideration.

Background you need

Daylight saving time uses a clock setting one hour ahead of standard time.
The article says some states do not follow daylight saving time.

Break it down

Opens with Trump's request and Cotton's opposition on October 3.
Explains daylight saving time and the bill's progress.
Describes supporters' arguments and opponents' school travel concerns.
Ends with the state choice provision and the daylight tradeoff.

Why it matters

The proposal concerns when daylight falls during evening activities and children's morning trips to school.

Test what you remember

1. What did Trump urge Americans to do on October 3?
 - (A) Contact Senator Tom Cotton
 - (B) Adjust their clocks that day
 - (C) Contact their school principals
 - (D) Change their morning travel plans
2. How are clocks set during daylight saving time?
 - (A) Two hours ahead of standard time
 - (B) Two hours behind standard time
 - (C) One hour behind standard time
 - (D) One hour ahead of standard time
3. Where did the Sunshine Protection Act pass in July?
 - (A) The United States Senate
 - (B) The Arkansas state legislature
 - (C) The House of Representatives
 - (D) Every participating state's legislature
4. What benefit do supporters see in the plan?
 - (A) Longer daylight throughout winter days
 - (B) More hours of sunlight each day
 - (C) Earlier sunrises during winter months
 - (D) More daylight during active hours
5. What concern does Cotton raise?
 - (A) Children changing clocks at school
 - (B) Children missing evening sports practice
 - (C) Children attending school in summer
 - (D) Children going to school in darkness
6. How could states choose not to take part under the proposal?
 - (A) Their schools could change opening hours
 - (B) Their residents could stop adjusting clocks
 - (C) Their lawmakers could act before passage into law
 - (D) Their senators could act after passage into law

Answer key (try the quiz first!): 1: A 2: D 3: C 4: D 5: D 6: C

Questions to think about

1. Donald Trump: Supports keeping daylight saving time all year and says changing clocks is troublesome.
2. Tom Cotton: Opposes the plan and expresses concern about children going to school in darkness.

MY THOUGHTS (at least 20 words):