Ella Langley Sings a Gentle New Song for the Next 'Hunger Games' Movie

From: Rolling Stone Music Mined: 2026-11-13 3 min read

Some songs feel like a quiet evening after a long day. Ella Langley's new song, 'Here Then We're Gone,' is one of them. The country singer shared the soft, acoustic song on Friday, November 13. It is part of the music for the new movie The Hunger Games: Sunrise on the Reaping.

Langley wrote the song with Aaron Raitiere and Ernest. Dave Cobb produced it. The words look back at someone who is gone. They ask about time moving on. 'Things, they don't always work out the way that I'd like,' Langley sings. 'Like how I wish he was still here to hold me tonight.'

The full soundtrack came out the same day. It has 29 songs. It also has Noah Kahan's song 'Draw You Out,' plus music from Noah Cyrus, Stevie Nicks, and more.

The movie opens in theaters on November 20. It is a prequel, a story that takes place before the first Hunger Games movies. It follows a young Haymitch Abernathy, played by Joseph Zada, in the 50th Hunger Games.

Word Treasure

acoustic -- An acoustic song is played on instruments that make sound on their own, without electric power.

soundtrack -- A soundtrack is all the music made for a movie.

prequel -- A prequel is a story that happens before an earlier story.

produced -- When someone produces a song, they help shape how the recording sounds.

Reaping -- Reaping means cutting down crops when they are ready to harvest.

Background you need

The Hunger Games is a series of movies about a contest where young people must compete to survive.

A prequel is a story that takes place before an earlier story, so this new movie shows events that happened before the first Hunger Games movies.

A movie soundtrack is a group of songs made for a movie, and singers sometimes write a new song to match the feelings in the story.

Break it down

WHO: Ella Langley, a country singer, with songwriters Aaron Raitiere and Ernest and producer Dave Cobb

WHAT: Langley shared a soft, acoustic song called 'Here Then We're Gone' for the new Hunger Games movie, and the full 29-song soundtrack came out the same day

WHERE: In movie theaters, where The Hunger Games: Sunrise on the Reaping opens on November 20

WHY: The song looks back at someone who is gone and wonders about time moving on, matching the movie's story of a young Haymitch Abernathy in the 50th Hunger Games

Why it matters

Music can help you feel less alone when you miss someone, just like a favorite song can comfort you after a hard day.
